31. Most companies spend a rather large proportion of their budgets persuading us to buy their products, and it is their executives who have to decide how to make consumers aware of brand new products. To do this, they usually set up an advertising campaign of some kind. Generally, a new product involves TV and radio commercials, Internet advertising and there may also be large advertisements on billboards along motorways and major roads.

In the past, companies usually employed people to sell the product in person but nowadays there is a far more popular technique which uses the telephone. Staff in large call-centres telephone potential customers, tell them about the product and try to convince them that it is definitely worth buying.

Another technique is to promote the new product by post. The company sends colourful catalogues to every house, even though people have not asked for them. They are so unpopular that people started to call them junk mail – and although they may contain free samples or discount vouchers, many people just put them straight into the rubbish bin!
